This play was developed through a collaborative research model. What started as an exploration of how group behavior operates in crowds eventually focused on the way group-think operates in the world of tech start-up culture. It brought us into contact with a wide range of people who work in and around those companies. We heard stories of wild ambition, excess, success, and utter failure. The satirical company we've created, Asphera, is a reflection of many of the jaw-dropping stories people were generous enough to share.

In many ways our research period feels like it happened in a different world. When I step back, however, I see the seeds of our current state threaded through the play: a world of extreme capitalism wrapped in a PR-crafted veneer of "changing the world" through innovation. They believe that the right messaging can make problems go away. It is a world that rewards ambition and financial success above shared humanity.

There has been tremendous joy in continuing to collaborate with our community in isolation. Experiencing this play through the technology of a corporate meeting platform - whatever else we intended during our process - is delightfully fitting for the story. At the same time, we worked to keep it a theatrical experience in the ways we love: live, favoring the real over the virtual, our stagecraft visible, and using space and movement in ways that prioritize the body in its environment over the frame and the edit.

I'd work with Mona and this company of actors anytime and anywhere. Until we can share the same room again, I'm grateful for this space and their unfailing humanity.

ON THE PROCESS

A collaborative process like this one is a rare, delicious treat. We began with a plan to create a show about crowds, and a year and a half later, we have created a show without crowds upon pain of death.

It feels fitting that we ended up as absolutely far away from where we began as possible. What we have now came together as a slow burn over the course of about a year and a half of winding improvisation, discussion, and play among a sometimes rotating group of actors, Scott, and Mona.

Much of what appears in this production comes directly from improvisation, led by Scott, and lovingly recorded and crafted into story by Mona, through a process of trustful creative groping, putting our feet forward in the dark of process one step at a time. With this iteration of Beginning Days of True Jubilation, the process continues. We may still be in the middle of what this play is, or could be, as a Zoom production or, potentially, an in-the-crowd-live-action play. The treat of this collaboration carries on!

In November 2017, I was asked to do a workshop at New Dramatists on a new play written by Mona Mansour and directed by Scott Illingworth. It was the first time I worked on a professional show using the Joint Stock Method that I’d learned at NYU Grad Acting. It felt like being back at home; throughout the workshop, I thought about how I missed working that way.

Mona mentioned - somewhat seriously, somewhat offhandedly - that she wished a professional company existed where we could work this way all the time, and she'd told (an initially skeptical) Scott they should form one. I agreed and offered my services. We kept talking, and over the course of a year a plan took shape for a pilot run that launched in 2019. Perhaps most crucially, Mark Wing-Davey offered us regular space to work at Grad Acting.

We knew a few things: we wanted to use the Joint Stock Method. We wanted actors to be involved from idea phase to production as both researchers and collaborators, never cast aside or replaced. We wanted a radically inclusive group. And we wanted to break the capitalist theatre model.

That pilot run became SOCIETY; and our first discussion eventually became the play you'll see tonight: Beginning Days of True Jubilation by Mona Mansour.

There's a book about the original Joint Stock venture in the UK (called The Joint Stock Book, simply enough) and its first line is: "It is hard to imagine a more foolish ambition than creating a theatre company."

They're right.

We did it, anyway.

This fall, SOCIETY will resume developing a new play with playwright Emily Zemba about astrology and spiritual wellness in the 21st century.

A live production will follow in 2021, as well as a full stage production of Beginning Days of True Jubilation.
A NOTE FROM THE ETHER

We have been forced out of our beloved theatres by a global pandemic. The theatre’s core relationship of physical bodies in a shared space is not currently available to us. And yet… artists continue to make art, and storytellers still have stories to tell.

The artists in this summer’s Ice Factory have all embraced our current terms-of-engagement and committed themselves to a rigorous and playful investigation of digitally-mediated, live-streamed shared time. Because that is what artists do: they work with the resources at hand to make something radically new. Each of the different artists in IF2020 take different approaches - foregrounding, exploding, and exploiting different qualities of this new medium. They are joyful and fearless in the face of this new and uncharted territory. And that is why we follow them with such giddy anticipation.

Enjoy!

BEGINNING DAYS OF TRUE JUBILATION

A visionary vows to create a life-changing product, with the smartest minds of her generation ecstatically on board. What could possibly go wrong? A satirical journey through the cult-like, group-think of winner-take-all capitalism, from the early euphoria of a new start-up through its epic crash and burn. Written by Mona Mansour, and directed by Scott Illingworth.

we need your listening

An empty theater lit by glowing blue screens. Phone calls after dark. Spinning confessionals. In a shifting theatrical landscape, individual audience members enter a dim space between digital and analog reality and are taken through a series of intimate, one-on-one exchanges with performers - discovering and re-discovering the act of listening as radical engagement.

ABOUT NEW OHIO THEATRE

New Ohio Theatre serves Manhattan’s most adventurous audiences by developing, curating and presenting bold work by New York’s independent theatre community. We believe the best of this community, the small artistic ensembles and the daring producing companies who operate without a permanent theatrical home, are actively expanding the boundaries of what theatre is and what it can be. From our home in the West Village’s historic Archive Building, the New Ohio strengthens, nurtures, and promotes this community, providing a professional, high-profile platform for downtown’s most mature, ridiculous, engaging, irreverent, gut-wrenching, frivolous, sophisticated, foolish, and profound theatrical endeavors.

THE TRANSIT ENSEMBLE
WHO'S THERE?

A Black American influencer accuses a Malaysian bureaucrat of condoning blackface. A Singaporean-Indian teacher launches an Instagram feud calling out racial inequality at home, post-George Floyd. A privileged Singaporean-Chinese activist meets a compassionate White Saviour, and an ethnically ambiguous political YouTuber takes a DNA test for the first time. This cross-cultural encounter involving artists based in Singapore, Malaysia, and the United States uses Zoom as a new medium to explore the unstable ground between us and “the other.” In this pandemic contact zone, lines along race, class and gender bleed into one another, questioning the assumptions we hold of ourselves and the world around us.

A BURNING CHURCH

A kaleidoscopic new musical tracing the lives of church leaders and congregants amid political movements, tragedies, and spiritual rebirth, A Burning Church is about an American institution fighting to survive a crisis of faith. This iteration will be presented as a virtual religious service, weaving in performances of songs from the show with sermons, commentary, and moments to hold spiritual space together -- space to imagine the role of the church in movements for liberation, as well as the form that church and theater can take when gathering is not possible.
